An Ordinance Establishing the Bangor Water Board.

Be it ordained by the City Council of Bangor as follows:

SECTION 1. As soon as may be after this ordinance shall take effect, there shall be a board of water commissioners, to be known as the Bangor Water Board, which shall consist of six persons, two of whom shall be members of the City Council, and four of whom shall be persons not members of the City Council, to be nominated by the Mayor and confirmed by the City Council, and shall be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties. The Mayor and City Clerk shall be members of said Board ex officio. The Mayor shall be President of said Board, and the City Clerk shall be its Clerk. The Mayor and City Clerk shall have the right to vote in the Board. The Mayor and City Clerk shall be members of said Board for the term for which they respectively shall be elected or appointed to their respective offices. The other members of said Board shall be appointed for the term of three years, except that two of the members first appointed shall be appointed for the term of two years, and two for the term of one year, respectively, from the first Monday of March next. Vacancies in said Board shall be filled by appointment by the City Council for the unexpired term. The members of said Board shall receive no compensation for their services. The Board shall have the power to make such rules and regulations for the government of said Board, and for the management of the Water Works, as they shall deem necessary and proper, not inconsistent with the laws of the State and the ordinances of the City of Bangor. The Board shall have the power to appoint a Superintendent of the Water Works, who shall be a person of good character and competent to perform the duties of said office, and who shall be a person of good character and competent to perform the duties of said office, and who shall be a person of good character and competent to perform the duties of said office, and

THE COMMITTEE PLAN.

[From the New York Times.]

The Joint Committee of the two houses of Congress has at last agreed on a plan for counting the Electoral vote. It makes the functions of the President of the Senate purely ministerial, and the two kinds of objections likely to be raised when the certificates are opened are to be settled as follows: First, when only one set of returns is presented from a State any objection to their reception must be sustained by the concurrent vote of both houses. Failing this, such returns must be counted as the vote of the State. When two sets are presented they are to be immediately referred to a commission composed of five Senators, five members of the House, four of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court—whose names are given—and one other Justice selected by these four. The decision of this tribunal of fifteen is to be submitted, at some time not fixed, to the two houses assembled in joint session, and is to be final, unless both houses agree to reject it. Excepting the single element of deciding by lot the composition of the Counting Court, this plan is open to all the objections which have been frequently set forth in these columns. It imposes on the Judges of the Supreme Court functions which they were never intended to perform, and it relieves the President of the Senate of duties which the framers of the Constitution deliberately and distinctly imposed on him. It is merely a device to stave off the settlement of questions which can and ought to be decided at once, and it renders possible the occurrence of a Presidential interregnum which would neither be creditable nor profitable to the country.

In the above article the Times suggests the principal objections which will be entertained by those Republicans who coincide in the views we have expressed concerning the only proper and Constitutional method of declaring the result of the Presidential election. We believe the proposed bill to be unconstitutional, unwise and unnecessary. It asserts a power of Congress over the votes of the States that is not granted in the Constitution, and it proposes to reopen a dispute over a verdict which has been rendered by the Electors of the States, the only body having authority to render it. The proposition that the whole details of the elections in several States shall be reviewed by an extraordinary tribunal unknown to the Constitution, and that they shall have power to alter or set aside the legally declared results of those elections, is virtually to order a new Presidential election, to be decided not by the Electoral College of the States, but by a board established by Congress. Instead of ending a controversy the bill proposes to reopen the whole question and to set a committee at work taking testimony, hearing affidavits and making investigations concerning elections conducted and concluded by the States, and the results of which are legally certified by the Constitutional documents now in the hands of the President of the Senate. We believe that Congress has no authority to attempt any such thing.

What fate the bill will meet in Congress we do not know. Opinions as to its probable effect upon the final result will be divided and many of Tilden's partisans will oppose it, while others have aided in framing it and give it their approval. One thing is certain: that if the position of the parties was directly reversed, there could not be found a Democratic Senator or Representative in Congress who would support any proposition whatever for interfering with the Constitutional right and duty of the President of the Senate to open, count and declare the Electoral votes.

Those votes are now all in the hands of their proper custodian and the mandate of the Constitution is that they shall be counted. The Democrats simply desire to succeed in some way in preventing the counting of all those votes. Their purpose is revolutionary and any compromise with it or concession to it is mischievous. "Expediency" is always inexpedient when it violates fundamental principles, and we object to overriding the plain letter of the Constitution for no better reason than that certain lawless demagogues are threatening to make trouble and that certain other people are ready to make fatal concessions rather than have a fuss.

THE TELEGRAPHIC DRAG NET.

[From the Boston Journal.]

If, according to the old saying slightly modified, all is fish that comes into the Democratic net about this time, some of the fish must be regarded as decidedly ugly customers, which the fishermen would rather not have seen. This is particularly the case with the telegraphic drag net cast for catching the despatches sent by the Republican National Committee to the disputed States. A great deal was expected from these, especially when David Dudley Field came into Congress for the express purpose, it was said of unearthing the conspiracy for counting in Hayes. He has taken the examination of witnesses before Mr. Knott's committee out of the chairman's hands, and is proceeding with all the shallow ingenuity of a New York shyster. For instance, the other day he asked Secretary Chandler if he had not telegraphed to Gov. Stearns of Florida, as follows: "You must send couriers to every county and doctor the returns to show a majority for Hayes." He assumed, falsely of course, that this was one of the captured telegrams in his possession. Whether his object was to make a parade before the public to the prejudice of the Republican Electors of Florida, or merely to confuse and bulldoze the hard head of Zach. Chandler, there was the same ignominious failure.

And so there appears to have been throughout the whole examination, so far as it has yet proceeded. The despatches sent from the Republican Committee to Florida on the days immediately succeeding the Presidential election, so far from showing, as a Democratic contemporary near by declares, that "of all the dark spots in the history of Grant's Administration this is the blackest," appear to have been really judicious and timely. The committeemen were on the lookout at that early day, and they were determined that nothing should be lost or risked through neglect of the highhanded Democratic tactics which were coming to light event then. "We are absolutely certain," says one of these telegrams—not a bogus one like that produced by Field—"of 185 votes for Hayes, if your State is safe, and Tilden is sure of the rest. Can you certainly defeat all Democratic attempts by fraud, false counting, or bribery, to capture it? Answer when sure." This was substantially the purport of all; and whether signed by Z. or W. E. Chandler, they are creditable to the authors, and we are happy to believe that they had an excellent effect in Florida. The despatches forwarded to Oregon and to Louisiana from the same source were of like tenor. We trust, therefore, now that this unjust and unconstitutional seizure of telegrams has been persisted in by the House Democrats, that the examination to be put upon them will be thorough and impartial. It remains to be seen whether the Democratic exposition, in the case of Oregon particularly, will begin to come out, as we hear Secretary Chandler's correspondence will.

THE COURSE OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ACCOMPANYING THE BILL FOR COUNTING THE VOTE.

The report of the Joint Committee of Congress accompanying the bill for counting the Electoral vote, expresses the belief that the law proposed cannot be justly assailed as unconstitutional by any one. "Our fidelity to the Constitution is observed when we find that the law we recommend is consistent with that instrument." The committee say: "In all just governments both public and private rights must be defined and determined by the law. This is essential to the very idea of such a Government and is the characteristic distinction between free and despotic systems. However important it may be whether one citizen or another shall be Chief Magistrate for a period prescribed upon just theories of civil institutions, it is of far greater moment that he will of the people lawfully expressed in the choice of that officer shall be ascertained and carried into effect in a lawful way. It is true that in every operation of a Government of laws from the most trivial to the most important, there will always be a possibility that the result reached will not be the true one. The Executive officer may not wisely perform his duty, the courts may not truly declare the law, and the Legislative body may not enact the best law, but in either case to redress the evil of the Executive, the courts or the Legislature define constitutionally and lawfully within their sphere, would be to set up anarchy in place of the government. We think in that time to provide a clear and lawful means of performing a great and necessary function of the Government in a time of much public dispute, is of far greater importance than the particular advantage that any man or party may in the course of events possibly obtain.

"But we have still endeavored to provide such lawful agencies of decision in the present case as shall be the most fair and impartial possible under the circumstances. Each of the branches of the Legislature and the Judiciary are represented in the tribunal in equal proportions. The composition of the judicial part of the commission goes to a selection from different parts of the Republic. While it is brought to be free from any preponderance of supposable bias, and the addition of the necessary constituent part of the whole commission intended to obtain an uneven number, it is left to an agency the farthest removed from the prejudice of any existing attainable one. It would be difficult if not impossible, we think, to establish a tribunal that could be less the subject of party criticism than such an one. The principle of its constitution is so absolutely fair that we are unable to perceive how the most extreme partisan can assail it, unless he prefers to embark his wishes upon the stormy sea of unregulated procedure, but disputes and dangerous results that can neither be measured nor defined, rather than upon the fixed and regular course of law that ensures peace and the order of society, whatever party may be disappointed in its hopes."

The unfortunate circumstance that no provision had been made on the subject before the election, has greatly added to the difficulties of the committees, in dealing with it, inasmuch as many of the people of the country, members of the respective political parties, will perhaps look with jealousy upon any measure that seems to involve even a possibility of the defeat of their wishes. But it has also led the committee to feel that their members are bound by the highest duty in such a case to let no bias or party feeling stand in the way of a just, equal and peace measure for extricating the question from the embarrassments that at present surround it.

In conclusion we respectfully beg leave to impress upon Congress the necessity of a speedy determination upon this subject. We cannot refrain from an expression of our satisfaction that your committees composed of equal numbers of opposing parties, have fortunately been able to do what has been attempted in vain heretofore, almost unanimously agree upon a plan considered by them all to be just, wise and sufficient. We accordingly recommend the proposed act to the patriotic and just judgment of Congress.

(Signed) George F. Edmunds, Frederick T. Frelinghuysen, Roscoe Conkling, A. G. Thurman, F. T. Bayard, M. W. Ransom, Senate Committee.

H. B. Payne, Eppa Hunton, Abram P. Hewitt, Wm. M. Springer, George W. McCrary, George F. Hoar, George Willard. Senator Morton was the only member of the Committee who did not sign the report.

A "GORE" REBEL. The editor of the Mansfield (La.) Reporter, is doubtless one of Bell Hill's patriots who are invincible in peace and invisible in war, else he would not print the following Watterson-ian sentiments:

"Are old friend, who protests against our fighting propensities, wants to know of us who is going to fight. We answer, the people of Louisiana. When and where are we going to fight? We answer, on the first Monday in January, and from thence onward to the bitter end, and wherever we find the enemies of constitutional liberty. Whom are we goin to fight? The minions and supporters of Packard and his usurpation. How are we going to fight? With all the power, God has given us, fire and sword, the dagger of the assassin, or his rifle's keener crack. Where are we going to get the money? Coin it from the heart's blood of the brave people. Are we going to fight the United States soldiers? We have no fight with them, and no fear of them, unless they fire on us, and then we will fight them more willingly than we did from 1861 to 1865."

HEWITT'S FALSE CHARGE. A Washington despatch says: "The Cox Investigating Committee is unanimous in the opinion that the charges made by Mr. Hewitt that his letters had been tampered with while in charge of the Post Office authorities, have not been sustained. The committee is satisfied that Mr. Hewitt's letters were not opened, and that he was too hasty in making the charge on the floor of the House of Representatives. Hewitt's case must have been a very miserable one when Cox's Democratic committee could not sustain him."

The Cincinnati Enquirer accuses the Democratic Sheriff of the county of abominable treachery in giving the county advertising to the Times, a paper devoted to the destruction of the Democratic party and the perpetuation of the common school system. We always thought the two things went together and here is a leading Democratic paper confessing it.

MAINE NEWS.

FROM THE STATE CAPITAL.

Friday's Proceedings in the Legislature—Sociables, Etc.

[SPECIAL TO THE WHIG AND COURIER.]

AUGUSTA, Jan. 19. The business of the Legislature fell off largely to-day. While the Senate voted to admit a few new matters for legislation, the House wholly declined.

Equity Powers.

A bill was introduced to give equity powers to the Supreme Judicial Court in any property fraudulently conveyed.

Defective Highways.

A bill was reported to remove the liability of towns to action for damages from defective highways.

Highway Tax.

A bill was reported to do away with highway taxes.

The State Finances.

The Finance Committee reported to the Senate that they had satisfactorily examined the books and accounts of State Treasurer Hatch, and find that everything agrees with his report to the Legislature. The committee report the amount of cash on hand Dec. 31, 1876 as $804,322.27, of which amount $1,012 they find in bank bills, $390 in specie, $85,241 in scrip and $48,769 deposited in National Banks in this State; and $144,223.53 in the Suffolk National Bank of Boston. The committee report they destroyed $287,000 in cancelled Bonds and $271,216 in coupons, being the amount paid for interest in 1876.

Railroad Commissioners.

Senator Wheelwright introduced a bill providing that neither of the Railroad Commissioners shall be a director, or not holding any office under any railroad company in the State, or own any stock or bonds directly or indirectly, or be in any way interested in any railroad in this State.

Game Laws.

Senator Phillips of Penobscot presented an order requiring the Supreme Judicial Court to furnish this Legislature an opinion on the question, whether the Legislature has authority under the Constitution of the State to prohibit the exportation of deer? The order was debated by Senators Vinton, Phillips and White, the former objecting to its passage, and suggesting that the consolidation of our game laws be left to a special commission to report to the next Legislature. The order was tabled at Senator Phillips' request. Meanwhile the lower branch passed an order to refer all all petitions, orders, etc., relating to the game laws to the Committee on Legal Affairs. The number of petitions that have come in for a change in our game laws so as to allow the exportation of deer is large.

Penobscot Log Driving Co.

The bill to amend the charter of the Penobscot Log Driving Co., was read twice in the House, and pending its passage to be engrossed was as signed for to-morrow.

Maine State Year Book.

The resolve to negotiate for the purchase of the Maine State Year Book, 700 copies, was read once in the House and assigned for Wednesday next.

Railroad Contract.

The bill to authorize a contract between the Bucksport & Bangor Railroad Co., and E. & N. A. Railway, Co., was finally enacted in the House.

Disclosures of Trustees.

An order of inquiry was referred to repeal sec. 31, chap. 86 of the U. S. relating to disclosures of trustees.

Savings Bank Bill.

The House has assigned the Savings Bank bill for Tuesday of next week.

Adverse Legislation.

Adverse legislation took place on the claim of W. W. Walker of Calais for reimbursement; also on making any change in the marriage law, and on compelling counties to build bridges costing over $400.

The Bangor and Piscataquis Extension.

The Railroad Committee had a meeting this noon and voted to table the bill for an extension of the Bangor & Piscataquis R. R. until their next meeting. No expression of opinion on the merits of the bill was given. It is understood that the point raised that proper notice had not been given by the petitioners before the meeting of the Legislature, together with the constitutionality of the legislation asked for, are matters which the Committee have under consideration; if these points can be cleared up, I have no doubt but what the committee will report favorably to the petitioners. This for noon Senator Wheelwright presented a bill in the Senate amendatory of the acts providing for loans of credit by the city of Bangor in aid of the construction of the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad. It's bill repeals the act approved January 28, 1875, and all amendatory acts. It extends the act approved February 22, 1871, extending the construction of the B. & P. R. R. and makes it applicable to any portion of the road which shall hereafter be constructed under the original charter of the company and the amendments thereof and under the extension of time for completing the road granted by the act of February 17, 1876. The act is not to take effect or be in force until it has been submitted to a vote of the legal voters of Bangor.

Dissolution of Corporations.

A bill was reported providing that a bill in equity may be filed by any officer of a corporation or creditor, when the stockholders have voted to dissolve. The court has jurisdiction to appoint receivers.

Foreign Corporations.

A bill was reported providing that in a writ of equity against a foreign corporation in this State service of the writ shall be sufficient by leaving an attested copy with the President, clerk, cashier, treasurer, agent, director or attorney of the company, or at the office of the company in this State. A bill was also reported providing for the summoning of any foreign corporation in this State in trustee process.

Corporation Meetings.

A bill was reported to allow the first meeting of new corporations to be called by public notice in the newspapers, signed by one or more of its bondholders.

Weir.

An amendatory bill was reported to repeal chap. 140 of the public laws of 1876, relating to weirs, and revive the provisions of sec. 30 of chap. 18 of the R. S.

Executes.

A bill was reported providing that when an execution issued by any court upon a judgment rendered on default of an absent defendant, within one year after rendition, without deposit of the bond, the execution shall be valid at the expiration of the year, and in case judgment is not reversed on review if brought within a year, all such proceedings shall be valid after joint judgment.

Various Matters.

Legislation will be reported inexpedient on abolishing imprisonment for debt, and requiring municipal officers to keep a record of persons moving in and out of towns.

The Railroad Committee voted to report the bill for the extension of the Somerset Railroad; to prevent loitering about railroads, and to disallow new railroad corporations to organize under the general railroad law, to build a road within ten miles of a road running in the same direction without permission of the Legislature.

Legislature Sociables.

The first of a series of Legislative Sociables was held at the Augusta House this evening. Governor and Mrs. Connor, members of the State Government and Legislature, and prominent citizens were present.

The Association for the Preservation of Fish.

The annual meeting of the Maine State Association for the Preservation of Fish was held at the Augusta House this evening. A goodly number of the members was present and much interest was manifested in the objects of the Association. The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, W. S. Badger, Augusta; Vice-President, C. B. Hazeltine, Belfast; Treasurer and Secretary, J. W. Clapp, Augusta; Executive Committee, J. H. Kimball, Bath, Manasseh Smith, Portland, Samuel E. Smith, Wiscasset. The Secretary was instructed to procure a change in the charter so as to include the protection of game within the scope of the Society.

FROM GARDINER.

Reform Club Anniversary.

[TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

GARDINER, Jan. 19. The fifth anniversary of the Gardiner Reform Club is being observed here to-day. Sixteen clubs from different parts of the State are represented. Several well known temperance men are present, among whom are Joshua Nye and Campmeeting John Allen. Much interest is manifested and Johnson Hall is filled to overflowing.

FROM PORTLAND.

Coroner's Inquest.

PORTLAND, Jan. 19. A coroner's jury held an inquest at Bethel to-day in regard to the recent accident on the Grand Trunk at Gilead, by which N. B. Mitchell was killed, and returned a verdict that no one was to blame.

Schooner Missing.

Schooner Jennie Crocker of Northport, with coal for Hoboken for Providence, has been missing forty-five days.

Decamped.

Wm. A. Woods of Biddeford, agent of the Portland, Saco & Biddeford Express, and recently Quartermaster of Post Sherdan, G. A. R., has decamped with one hundred dollars of the express company's money and two or three hundred of the Post's funds. He has gone to Philadelphia.

FROM SACO.

The Supreme Court.

SACO, Jan. 19. In the Supreme Court to-day James Guinty, for larceny on the Eastern Railroad, was sentenced to 18 months in the State Prison; Wm. Herbert, common seller and drinking house, fined $200 and costs or 5 months in jail. On trial—the case O. B. Dollill vs. Boston & Maine Railroad. Ten cases were taken from the docket and referred, the most important being the case Jordan vs. Lowell, administrator, which was referred. Deputy Warden Rice took to the State Prison a batch of seven convicts.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, Second Session

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.

Senate.

Mr. Cameron presented the resolution adopted by the Pennsylvania Legislature, declaring the will of the people in the election of President and Vice-President can only be declared in the manner prescribed by the Constitution, and denouncing any threats of violence or attempt to cast out the Electoral vote of any State by either House of Congress.

The House bill making appropriations for the Consular and Diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30th, 1878, was taken up. Several amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to and the bill passed without discussion.

A motion to adjourn over to-day until Monday was withdrawn when the mover learned Mr. Edmunds intended to call up the compromise bill for action to-morrow.

The resolution of Mr. Wallace relative to the count of the Electoral vote was taken up and Mr. Bogy continued his remarks on Louisiana affairs.

During the debate on Louisiana Mr. Bogy said that the character of Packard in New Orleans was that of an infamous robber. Great applause followed in the gallery on the right of the chair, and on the motion of Mr. Edmunds the Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to clear the galleries on the right of the chamber. The order was executed immediately and the galleries designated were cleared without trouble.

Mr. Hamlin presented the credentials of Hon. James G. Blaine, elected United States Senator from Maine to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. Lot M. Morrill and also the credentials of Mr. Blaine, elected United States Senator from that State for six years, from March 4th, 1877, both of which were read and placed on file.

Mr. West from the Committee on Railroads reported with amendments the Senate bill recently introduced by Gordon to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of Government bonds advanced to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, the Western Pacific Railroad Co., and the Union Pacific Railroad Co., under the act of July 1st, 1862, and the acts amendatory thereof and for the settlement of the claims of the Government on account of said bonds. Placed on the calendar.

Messrs. Sherman and Morton replied to Mr. Bogy.

Pending the discussion Mr. Windom, from the Conference Committee on the bill making an appropriation to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, made a report which was agreed to. The report has agreed upon appropriates $40,000 for the transportation of Government notes, bonds etc., $24,000 for the investigating committees of the House of Representatives, and $25,000 for the investigations now being conducted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate.

The Senate then went into Executive session and when the doors were reopened adjourned.

House.

Mr. Hunton's resolution discharging M. Orton, President of the telegraph company, from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, was adopted without division.

Madison Wells and Thomas C. Anderson were before the bar of the House in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms to answer for contempt of the House. The witness having answered to the questions propounded by the Speaker, said they would prefer to postpone their further answers until the two other members of the Louisiana Returning Board shall arrive in Washington. The matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Ellis of La., offered a resolution calling on the President for information in regard to the rival governments in Louisiana. Referred.

Mr. Foster of Ohio, submitted the report of the Conference Committee on the bill to supply the deficiency in the contingent fund of the House, and it was agreed to.

Mr. Holman of Ind., from the Appropriation Committee, reported the Legislative Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, and it was made a special order for Tuesday next.

Adjourned till to-morrow.

WASHINGTON.

The Western Union Company to Give Up the Telegrams Demanded.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19. The Committee on Powers and Privileges and Duties of the House met this morning, when the members of the Executive Committee of the Western Union Telegraph Co. appeared in answer to a subpoena of the House. The counsel of the company read a paper signed by Mr. Orton to the effect that the company in view of all the circumstances think it would not be right longer to postpone compliance with the subpoena. A sub-committee was authorized to receive the telegrams. The Executive Committee was then discharged. Two telegraph officials from Augusta and Philadelphia were examined, but could recollect no telegrams promising troops.

Pelton's Word for It.

Pelton testified before the Committee on Elections this morning that he did not telegraph Senator Kelley on the 8th of November last that Tilden must have one Electoral vote from Oregon and that Kelley would be depended upon to see that he obtained it, while he (Pelton) would furnish the means necessary for procuring the same.

The Cabinet Session.

Though the Cabinet session to-day was of considerable length and fully attended, there was little of interest beyond the routine affairs which accumulated within the past week. The most important matter considered was the subject of fraud upon the revenue in the Southern States.

THE COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The President's Views on the Compromise Bill.

NEW YORK, Jan. 19. The Tribune states that the President in conversation with a friend on the proposed Electoral vote compromise said he had not yet had time to examine the bill carefully and critically, but on general principles he approved it as a measure of the character alluded to, if not objectionable in detail, or if did not contain provisions at variance with the spirit and letter of the constitution, he would accord to it his prompt approval. He said he is much encouraged by the prospect of a peaceful solution of the difficulty, for the two parties in Congress through a compromission having once agreed upon a common base of adjustment of their differences, it will not be difficult to bring about a final settlement. The country, he said, is now in a condition to begin a period of unexampled prosperity, founded on correct principles of business and a proper standard of value and all that is wanting is an amicable and satisfactory settlement of the Presidential question.

Mr. Morton.

Mr. Morton said to one of the House members of the committee that, although he should not sign the report he should probably say nothing in the Senate to oppose the passage of the bill.

Governor Dix.

Ex-Governor Dix in a letter says all schemes to take away the count of the Electoral vote from the President of the Senate, are unconstitutional and revolutionary.

The N. Y. Times' Views.

The Times says the compromise Electoral bill is a manifest compromise of the Republicans are entitled to hold.

The Bulletin

speaking for business men favors the bill, and says merchants, business men and industrial classes should let our legislators hear from them and that the country does not belong exclusively to politicians.

The World

holds that the power to count the Electoral votes inheres in the House and holding such views cannot reconcile them with the compromise proposed.

The Herald

says: We have strong confidence that the judicious plan of the joint committee for counting the Electoral votes will be endorsed by American people.

Endorsed by the Connecticut Senate.

HARTFORD, Ct., Jan. 19. The Senate to-day passed a resolution endorsing the plan proposed by the Congressional Committee for settling the Presidential question and requesting Senators and Representatives to support the plan in Congress. The House tabled the resolution and made it a special order for Wednesday, Jan. 24th.

SENATORIAL BALLOTINGS.

Mr. Hoar Elected.

BOSTON, Jan. 19. The 37th joint ballot for U. S. Senator resulted as follows:—Hoar, 116; Abbott 62; Boutwell, 47; Rice 19; Bullock, 25 Seelye, 1; Chandbourne, 1. This elects Mr. Hoar by a majority (f).

Illinois—No Choice.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 19. On the 13th ballot for United States Senator to-day the following was the result: Whole number of votes 204; necessary to a choice 103. Logan had 50; Palmer, 50; Anderson 9; Davis 4; Harris 2; Logan 95; Palmer 2; Harris 1.

The 17th ballot resulted: Anderson 13; Palmer 80; Anderson 13; Palmer 2; Harris 1.

Our Augusta contemporary quotes the following item: "Mr. M. S. Drummond of Bangor, yesterday paid the fortieth year which he has taken the Kennebec Journal. He first subscribed for it when he was 21 years of age."

We are informed that the Rising Virtue Lodge F. & A. M. will publicly install its officers Tuesday evening, Jan. 30th. After the installation exercises are over a supper and dance will be given by the members of the Lodge.

Rev. Dr. Quimby, of Augusta, editor of the Gospel Banner, will supply the Universalist pulpit in this city to-morrow both afternoon and evening. The evening service will be at 7 o'clock, and the subject of the sermon will be, "Proofs of Immortality drawn from facts in Nature."

The Kennebec Journal corrects the statement that the late Judge Ether Shepley, just deceased, was the last surviving member of the Convention that framed the Constitution of Maine and says that Mr. Christopher Dyer of New Sharon, aged 85, who is enjoying a green old age, was one of the original members of that Convention.

F. A. H. Stackpole, postmaster at Kenduskeag at the date fire in that place, labored with others to preserve the mails, etc., and the records of the town, which were kept in the office, and when this was accomplished the hotel was burned and with it considerable property belonging to Mr. S. His loss, in that place, have raised $40 and presented him to replace in part his loss.

SACRED CONCERT. As will be seen by reference to another column, Mr. W. H. McDowell gives the first of a series of sacred concerts at Norombega Hall to-morrow evening, and the programme shows that it will be a rich musical treat. Mr. McDowell's describing of a liberal patronage in this movement, and our citizens will doubtless give him a full house to-morrow evening. Tickets can be obtained at Davenport's and Wood, Stern & Co's.

COMPLIMENTARY. Mr. Hiram L. Leonard, the veteran fishing rod maker, of this city, has recently received an award and medal from the Commissioners of the Centennial Exhibition for excellence of workmanship in the manufacture of his rods. In a recent lecture in the hall of the Massachusetts Anglers Association Mr. Walter M. Brackett, the celebrated artist, gave Mr. Leonard a very flattering endorsement as being the best fishing rod maker in the country. His fame has spread not only in this country, but he has recently shipped six of his best rods to England.

THE OPENING OF THE K. & P. ASSEMBLY. The Knights of Pythias, whose entertainments have always proved popular, inaugurated their Course of Assemblies most successfully at Music Hall last evening. The attendance was large, comprising more than seventy couples, and there was a pleasant intermingling of the younger and older portions of society. The floor was in fine condition and Messrs. E. F. Small, W. H. Adams, A. F. Snow, F. W. Roberts and F. D. Pulion very happily discharged the duty of Managers. Inspiriting music was furnished by Peakes Quadrille Band, and the programme of fourteen dances held nearly the whole company to the end. Those who preferred to look on had the full use of the gallery seats, and certainly no pleasanter sight was seen than the amusement afforded by the various groups of interested little players and spectators. From all indications the older people enjoyed the occasion quite as much as their younger friends, and it was a pleasant thing to see them joining in social recreation. The course has started very auspiciously and the Knights intend that each Assembly shall be better than the preceding.

SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SEA WEED TONIC AND MANDRAKE PILLS.—The severally celebrated and popular remedies have effected a revolution in the art, and proved the fallacy of several systems which have for many years disguised the progress of medical science. It is a supposition that Consumption is incurable deterred physicians from attempting to find remedies for that disease. Patients afflicted with it reconciled themselves to death without making an effort to escape from a doom which they supposed unavoidable. But it now proved, beyond a doubt, that Consumption can be cured, and has been cured in every great number of cases (some of them apparently desperate ones) by Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, and in other cases by the same medicine in connection with Schenck's Sea Weed and Mandrake Pills, one or both as to the requirements of the case.

Dr. Schenck himself, who enjoyed uninterrupted good health for more than years, was supposed, at one time, to be very near death; his physicians pronounced his case hopeless and abandoned him to his fate. How he was cured by the above said medicines, and his recovery, many thousands similarly cured have proved. Dr. Schenck's direct with the above remedies accompany each. Full directions for accompanying each. It not probable that it necessary to consult Dr. Schenck, unless patients within professionally at his principal office, corner Sixth and Arch Sts., Philadelphia, every Monday, where all letters for advice must be addressed. Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists everywhere.

THE FATE OF ETIENNE FAREC.

BY JUSTIN McCARTHY.

It was in the reign of Louis the Well-beloved—Louis the Fifteenth of France. It was toward the close of that reign and the third of the three famous Coliberts. France was miserably poor, and Paris was very splendid—and very poor, too, at the heart, and at the extremities. Again, a neighboring island, nearly three quarters of a century later, a poet sang that, though Ireland starved, great Grattan was twenty stone, so in France, though the people were miserable, the king had every thing he could wish for, and plenty of gratifications round him to suggest new wishes to him, that they might have the honor and profit of gratifying the wishes. The fair Du Barry, now a little on the wane, was still delighting her subject-master by her pretty and refined jokes—about the spilling of the coffee, and so forth; and holy princes of the Church were still contending for the honor of holding the slippers while she put her dainty feet into them.

Down in a country town by the sea that washes between France and the English coast there lived a poor young man, Etienne Farec by name, a clever lad, who had more of good looks and talents than common sense. His father and mother were decent people, who kept the Fleur-de-Lis Inn—a comfortable house enough, whose even the great people sometimes condescended to patronize when they happened to be making a journey to or from England. Such journeys, indeed, were not very common among the great at that time—that is, among the French great people; for the English, then as now, were forever coming and going, and the grand tour was, of course, part of the necessary education of every English gentleman. The English, when they came and went, did not much visit the Fleur-de-Lis, for it was but the second inn belonging to the town, and the Breton, in his lordly way, only asked where the first inn was, and went there directly and spent his money. But nobodies—of France, was not then much given to spending money, except where their personal gratification was to be had by it; and so the Fleur-de-Lis was inferior to the other, but better in name, many French nobles or gentlemen companies with the embassy at the British court were accustomed, when traveling northward and forward, to use the Fleur-de-Lis for a night. So it happened that the young Etienne have spoken of come to see people and to observe their manners.

Once there came to rest at the inn for a night the Vicomte de Moleville, with his wife, his daughter, and his retinue. The vicomte was a stiff, stately, stern personage, with an aquiline nose and a pale cheek. The vicomtesse was a handsome woman, still in her prime, likewise with an aquiline nose and a pale cheek; but she had dark flashing eyes, while her husband's were a cold light blue. She belonged to a family greater than that of the vicomte, and she was very proud of it. Her daughter was a beautiful lively girl, like a young fawn, with deep blue eyes, in which, some of them a darker light of her mother's might be seen to flash. Etienne Farec saw her as she entered the court-yard, and the sight made his ruin. He had stepped forward to open the carriage door for her, or to do some other such trifling courtesy, and although he was not permitted to carry out his intention—there were followers enough, expressly kept to do all such offices—the young lady noticed his movement and thanked him with a gracious bend of the head and a gentle fall and then an elevation of her eyelids, from beneath which her eyeglands, for one short, delicious, bewildering moment, rested on him. He saw her only once again that day, when she entered her carriage to go away next morning. Again she threw him a sort of half-recognizing glance, and the poor young fellow's heart nearly burned within him. If he could only have known what would come of that glance in the end, perhaps he would have been prudent in the first, and have leaped out once from the chamber of his dreams straight into the street to meet toward a child, and put himself out of pain. Yet I ought not to say that; for he had a generous soul, with all his vanity and inexperience, and would have been content, could he have known, that things should go as they did.

Etienne was an aspiring, romantic young fellow, with a fine hand some face and a good figure. He had some little gift of poetry, too. His head was stuffed with verses of Ronsard and other poets whom love supplied with most of their inspiration; when he looked down or affected to look down, on the stately pathos of Racine and the grandiloquent tragic verse of Corneille. He had but little appreciation of the immortal humor of Molière; and of all the great works of M. De Voltaire, from the Philosophical Dictionary to the Henriade, he called for nothing but the one little love poem or rather one little lament for the loss of love, which had, in my poor friend's opinion, a general fine poetry and tender nature in it:

"Oh, ceasing death, do thou spare me still to live!
Restore to me Love's sweet joy, or else take me!
Let me die in the bliss and anguish of love,
Let me pluck the Autumn fruit in autumn!

"Let me, in the bright scenes where gods of wine
And gods of love hold joyous sway,
Let me, with a world of bliss in mine,
Let me, at last, fall and die away.

"Oh, cease, ye die, thy warnings! Love!
Let this man to part with breath!
The other and the bitter death
Is when we close the soul of love!"

And so on through many other verses, which Etienne often repeated, but which I need not attempt to translate. The young fellow was, as I have said, himself to some degree a poet. He really had composed some tender and touching little verses, into which there entered, perhaps because he had lived so much away from fellows, more of the spirit of nature than either their author might be commonly seen to have, or than the poetry of France (Young Etienne loved the country and the sea and the face of nature, the cloud and the sunshine and the shadows, and the night perhaps have sung some of these things in verse that would have lived—if—if—it might have been ever could become the thing it has been.) But some of his poems were very pretty, and the village curate, a man who had travelled and had some skill in letters, and was not afraid or ashamed to read Rousseau, told Etienne that he really believed he would yet come to be a poet, with patience and labor—great labor and patience and modesty, added M. the Curé, smiling.

From the day, however, that our young poet saw Germaine de Moleville he ceased to sing of Nature, and took to singing only of Love. Now Nature is an easy offend god goddess, and when Etienne ceased to praise her, she ceased to inspire him. His love poems were very fantastic and extravagant things, indeed. He was as much in love with Germaine as a man can possibly be with a woman he has never spoken one word to; indeed, with his love for her had been the deep, steady growth of intimacy and affinity, it does not by any means follow that it could make him a true poet of love. So his love being very real, his style of poetry was nevertheless very unreal, glittering, fantastic, and false.

The curé shook his head. But the curé's mind did not reflect the opinion of his day and his people; and whereas the poems which the curé approved were cared for by nobody else, the poems over which he shook his head were immensely admired by all the neighbors. They became quite the talk of the whole place, and people began to boast that their town had a wonderful young poet, who could astonish some of your famous Parisians and make Academicians envious; quite a young Ronsard—nay, a very Rabelais of modern days. Etienne's verses were full of inflated, hyperbolical, emphatic phrases, of extravagant rapture and sickly adulation, and there was a property about them which they certainly did not borrow from Ronsard. This was in the corrupt unwholesome, vicious age, and in all such ages the true and manly love of man for woman and womanhood has always disguised itself in sickly emphasism and milk-and-water affection. Young Etienne's verses exactly hit the taste of the age, and great people resting at the inn came to hear of them, and they read, and admired them, and graciously sent for the poet and patronized him and brought him to Parisian salons, always craving for novelty, the story of a handsome young innkeeper's boy down in the provinces who could compose poems that far surpassed those of La Fontaine.

The echo of Etienne's verses soon returned to his own ears. His poetry, shot out by his inspired moods, came back to him like the Australian boomerang. He began to think that he had already a name and a fame in Paris, that Paris waited for him, yearned for him, and he longed to be there. Let me do him justice. Not any vanity, not egotism, not self-love, not the sickening thirst for praise, was the chief impulse which drove him to Paris. But he knew that Paris held the lovely, queenly girl he was foolish enough to love, and he said in his heart, "I shall be near her in Paris. He thought to himself, "A poet, in Paris, no matter what his birth is the equal of nobles. Louis, the great monarch, rebuked the courtiers who looked coldly on Molière; and Molière was the son of a tradesman. Why may not I meet on poetic terms the daughter of a vicomte?"

So one day he told his father and mother that he had made up his mind not to be an innkeeper. He was going to be a great poet, and as the people and necessary condition preliminary of being a great poet, he was going to live in Paris.

He was an spoiled child; his mother could not deny him anything; and what could his father do, his father would not gainsay his son? Neither much liked the step their son was taking. The father would have wished him to carry on honestly and decently the old Fleur-de-Lis; and thought little of poets; his mother would have been well pleased that her son should be a poet, provided he could with her. But he had his way; his father and mother consented that he should go, and being people well to do promised to make him a respectable yearly allowance, in order that he might not be a poor poet, some poets they had heard of. There was a parting, sad on both sides, indeed; but made brighter on the part of Etienne by the thought that he was at least he was going to Paris and to the lovely Germaine; and so he went his way, and before long stood for the first time, a wonder-wounded provincial, in the gardens of the Tuileries.

There is an exquisite old English ballad about a country shepherd who forsook the haunts of his youth and came to the glittering city, leaving behind him his Angelina and believing that ambition would soon cure him of love. Our poor French provincial came up to town under different auspices; he came to pursue his love and his ambition together. The ambition at least, was to be well. The handsome young poet made what we should now call a great success. He fascinated the lion of the hour in Paris salons. His manners, and that native grace which hardly ought to be the result of any teaching, if etiquette, the world, have secured a graceful gentleman anywhere, and his training in a small town would at least have saved him from the mishap of the adventurer whom a certain celebrated French dandy discovered to be no gentleman because of his inaccurate way of eating pears. His poesies were immensely extravagantly admired and praised. Men of genuine literary merit looked coldly or playingly at him; other men jealoused at him; many men hated him; but the women adored him in their own way, and this pleased and soothed the young poet's vanity. But it only touched his vanity, not his heart. That was wholly filled and governed by his Angelina, whom now he sometimes saw in the salon of her mother, and whom he grew to love with all the passion of his really earnest and manly nature.

Now, whatever the wickedness and vice of those times, it was not the fashion to blind up unmarried women with as rigid bonds of seclusion and espionage as is now the way in Paris, where absolute restriction before marriage is the prelude to absolute license after. Our poet had much better opportunities of occasionally conversing freely with the daughter of the house than he could have if he lived in Paris now. The sublime aristocrats, her father and mother, no more thought of keeping their daughter back from speech with Etienne than they would have imposed a check upon her courtesy to the gardener, or the concierge. Poor or not, the son of an innkeeper was an innkeeper's son, and the daughter of M. the Vicomte's wife was not likely to carry her admiration for an innkeeper's poet to any dangerous length. So our poet hung after her, wrote eternal sonnets to her, lived only in the light of her gracious presence, and was so unhappy that he grew thinner as he grew more feted and celebrated, and his eyes began to burn with a wan lustre which the mere critic of rhyme-making never yet lighted.

As for Germaine, she of course, saw in Etienne Farec only the poet. Alternately idolatory, fear, the pride, alternately gratified and wearied her; now she was proud of it, and now she was proud of it and now she was ashamed of it. But at no time did it occur to her to be a matter worthy of any serious consideration. She, was proud, she was capricious, but she had a heart; and in that heart our poor poet had its place.

Time passed on, and Etienne was nearly driven to madness by sheer love for the girl, who alternately fired him and frozen him, as her humor might be, and who meanwhile hardly ever bestowed a genuine and serious thought on him. At last a crisis came.

The Vicomte and Vicomtesse de Moleville had a chateau not far from the palace gardens of Versailles. They gave a grand fête there one summer evening, and our poet was one of the guests. He came with his sonnet ready for the occasion, which was read before the guests at the proper time, and much admired, and patronized. But he had his private sonnet too, its hyperboles and its emphasis the more so addressed to the divine Germaine herself (whom he called Artemis, or some such lofty name,) and when chance allowed him, he pressed it tenderly into her hand and had her read it alone, and favor him with the decision of her exquisite judgment on it. He chose a bad time.

Artemis's soul was heavy within her that night, and she was in no mood for gallantry or love making,—at least for love-making such as poor Etienne could make.

Evening—a delicious summer evening—fell upon the groves and the turf and the fountains and plaster nymphs, and the walks and summer-houses of the De Moleville chateau. Germaine stole away down a silent, shady path, to be rid of her friends and followers and admirers. Our wretched, ill-starred Etienne Farec, who had kept a burning eye on her movements, must see in the retirement of her a favorable opportunity. Heaven sent for him, and so he pursued her, and stood by her side just as the sun had gone down, and Venus was beginning to shine in the sky.

Germaine looked coldly at him with ominous contraction of her eyebrows, as he stood by her side.

"Had mademoiselle done him the honor to read his poor poem?"

She started; then recollected herself.

"Yes—oh, yes."

"It was at least sincere."

"Was it?"

She had forgotten what it was all about, and did not care to rack her brain to remember any of its contents.

"It expressed an homage which mortal might pay only to his divinity," said, oh, unkindly Othello, oh, Germaine," the poor poet went on, becoming positively simple and natural in his deep and true emotion, "have you nothing to say to me?"

"Nothing. What do you mean?"

"What do I mean? Can you ask me? Do you not know?"

She came to a dead stand, now, she paused to admire, and she turned the cold light of her eyes full on him.

"Germaine, do you know how long I have loved you, that you are life and light and heaven (pardon, he might have added, and hell) to me?"

She started, and seemed for a moment as if she were about to scream, so wild was the expression in the eyes and on the lips of the distracted youth. But she crushed down her emotion, and asked, in a tone of cold irony, "Is this a poetic recitation, M. the Poet?" "It is wasted here, it ought to be given for the delight of the whole company."

"You mock me; but you must and you do understand me. I love you, Germaine. I will live and die loving you. I have loved you since first I saw you—"

"At your father's inn."

"This was a crush, an impossible crush, the woman who stood before him then was capable of anything, and no woman ever knows or cares to know the rules about hitting fair. He, however, heeded little. Had she spurned him, he would still have pleased himself and adored.

"Germaine, even if you spurn, still wounds me, my love, you so much. Let you shall not go, you shall hear the end."

"M. Farec, you know that, cry from me you'd bring friends of mine who would resent your love-making at the deadliest insult, and in whose consideration your life would not count for half the value of a glove on my hand. I am more forgiving and tolerant. I pity you and spare you. Now, enough—I pity you and spare you. Let me hear no more of this."

He smiled a wild, wan smile. "Give me, then, my life," he said, "and call your people. I am not afraid to die. I am weary of life, and should like nothing better than to be killed here under your eyes because I adored you. My very death would be a proof of my love. Oh, Germaine, have you no heart, no pity? Never, never will I be more than a mere idolater to you. Thank God, at least you now know that I love you."

"M. Farec, do you know yourself? Do you know who you are and who I am, and that you are the equals of Abigails?"

A positive smile, involuntary, irresistible, came on Germaine's lips. Despite the passionate earnestness of the young man, despite his fine figure, his burning eyes, and his wasted cheek, she could almost have laughed in his face. He really, then, had taken as grant, forsooth, the compliments paid to his poetry. As if a court poet was really much better than a court fool. Still, she kept from laughing outright, and only said,

"M. Farec, this must come an end. Your love-making is an insolence which is only to be excused by its downright madness. I forgive it this time, and I will not subject you to the indignity of being thrust from my father's grounds by my father's servants. But I must never hear of this again."

"Will I live?"

"I would gladly forgive you, Germaine, I will love you, I will cling to you and cling to you. We are fearfully bound together by the link of my love for you and your knowledge of it. Not for a moment dare I break that link. Germaine, I will love you."

His wildness at last really frightened her. The night air and her nerves were easily shaken.

"Oh, go! she said, "for God's sake, go. Stir hold of me, lest I fall. Let me go! I, I, I,
